There really needs to be some way to stop or delay this scan without breaking out Activity Monitor and killing the process.

The solution that I've used in the past is to set the Energy Saver Preference Pane 'Schedule' to do a startup or wakeup just prior to the scheduled scan.. I could go on with pros and cons of both products, but I won't; in my 0 persons liked this post.. 100WattWalrus wrote:My laptop is asleep when I'm asleep And, if you schedule the scan for a time when it's asleep it will run when you next awaken it with the new way schedules are set up, which is probably not what you want, either.. Thanks for the advice I'll have to work something out The scheduling the MBP to wake means I'll have to remember each week, the night before the scan runs, to have my computer somewhere other than my desk that closes up, with the laptop inside and closed, so I can leave the lid up, so when it wakes it won't go right back to sleep.. It should go back to sleep again after the scan finishes and the laptop has been inactive for the time setup in that same pane.

It has never found anything on either machine - but then, that is in all ClamXav Discussions • View topic - ProtectMac AntiVirus, ClamXav..
